

My Homeschool Vision

1. What is your "why" for homeschooling?

2. What matters most to your family?

3. What are the subject and testing requirements in your state?

Unsure? Check out <https://homeschoolsafari.com/state-homeschool-laws>

4. What additional subjects are important for your children to learn?

5. Which of these things are you comfortable teaching your children and which ones do you need to outsource to someone else?

- Set goals for your year based on the information listed above. Figure out what your priorities are, which subjects have to be taught this year vs. subsequent years, etc. Try to visualize what you want the school year to look like. Some subjects, such as music lessons, can also begin over the summer if the school year gets too busy.
- Acknowledge that you aren't a failure if you don't complete everything by the end of the year. As a homeschool family, you decide when you are done, and you can even continue into the summer if you need to (or want to). Starting is the hardest part, so give yourself grace.
