Lights on the Shore

For hundreds of years, lighthouses have helped sailors find their way at night. A lighthouse stands near dangerous rocks or at the entrance to a harbor. Its bright light warns ships to stay away from danger. Long ago, keepers lived in or beside the lighthouse. They climbed the stairs each evening to light the lamp and keep it burning until morning. Today, most lighthouses run automatically, so no keeper is needed. Some old lighthouses have become museums where visitors can climb to the top.
